A Ford on a State Highway.

In Washington County, Utah, where the topography is ragged, the population seanty and scattered, and the money available for road building is very limited, a masonry ford has been built on a State highway instead of a bridge. The stream crossed in this way has a sandy bed, which is dry during a considerable part of the year. A bridge would be expensive in itself and require expensive embankments for the approaches to it. The ford is 180 feet long, including the 10 per cent grade running down from the roadway at each end to the submerged portion. It was built by constructing along the upstream line of the cross-
